LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

EDITORS:

Many chess players in this area are still wondering why it is necessary to have the Central California Chess Association. "Why," they ask, "couldn't the Chess Friends of Northern California be changed to conform to a more democratic and aboveboard pattern?" Recently we have seen why this method is impossible, and at the same time a revealing example of the way in which CFNC continues to operate.

The Berkeley YMCA Chess Club planned to hold its annual Berkeley Open on 22-23 June as a United States Chess Federation tournament. The club has held CFNC tournaments in the past during the summer, but has no written or oral commitment to do so. As soon as CFNC found out about this, it decided to hold a CFNC tournament on the very same day at the Oakland Central YMCA and to offer unusually large prizes. No officer of the Oakland Chess Club was informed at that time of the CFNC tournament, to be held in their city at their accustomed tournament site. After one of the officers of that club, having learned of the tournament for the first time by the announcement published in Chess in Action, CFNC's organ, suggested to CFNC that if it held a tournament in Oakland, the Oakland Chess Club was entitled to some financial consideration, CFNC officials went to another officer of that club and made a separate deal with him to direct the tournament. That officer was then to go back to the Oakland Chess Club, present himself as director of the tournament, dictate the prizes, and force the club to cosponsor the tournament on CFNC's terms or forfeit their due profit from the tournament. In other words, CFNC arranged the entire tournament, conflicting with a previously scheduled tournament, and without any prior consultation with the Oakland Chess Club whatever, forced that club to accept their terms, run the tournament themselves, or else receive no money from it.

It is up to each chess player, on the basis of the facts, to act as he judges best.

EDITORS:

I just received your June issue of Scaccic Voice (It's excellent) and wish to correct two mistakes made by myself in the report on the National Open. For the record, officially there were 111 players, as correctly reported by Richard Lee. Benko scored wins over Rivise, Formanek, and Saidy, but did not play Kaplan. Kaplan lost to Wunberger and Dr. Saidy.
