WORLD CHAMPIONS (14)

1961-1963 BOTVINNIK,
1963-1967 PETROSIAN—Tigran Petrian was born in 1929 in Armenian sia. He combines the styles of it (Hypermodern), plays positional like Nimzovitch and Capablanca, didefends like Steinitz. He builds game on positional lines and possess phenomenal endgame technue. He has great tactical alertess and inexhaustible patience. Herdly loses a game. Rus Reti ally and his nique his gallie with the sessesses phenomenal enuganical alertness and inexhaustible patience. He hardly loses a game.

This, then, is a brief summary of the world champions and their individual characteristics . . . characteristics that possibly made them champions!?

Is the modern player better? I wouldn't say so. Each champion in his own time made use of what had been learned before him. To this he added his own talent. All these players would be outstanding in any period of time. They were and are the best and most successful chessplayers in the world.

As for future possibilities, mention must be made of our own Bobby Fischer the talented young American Grandmaster. He possesses a fully rounded style. He is both the tactician and strategist, an opening expert without peer and a virtuoso of the endgame. The U.S. champion can make it—and 1969 should see him as world champion!
